

Case study – Mohamed V University, Morocco

Multi-service student card management platform

Context

Mohamed V University, one of Morocco's largest universities, wanted to improve students' daily lives and support their mobility on and off campus.

+90 000 students

+2 500 educators

+20 institutions

Objectives

The university was looking for a solution that would allow for:

- Improved quality of service for students and university staff,
- Reduced management costs (student registration and re-registration, fewer badges and access cards, etc.),
- Development of new added-value services.

M2M Group's response

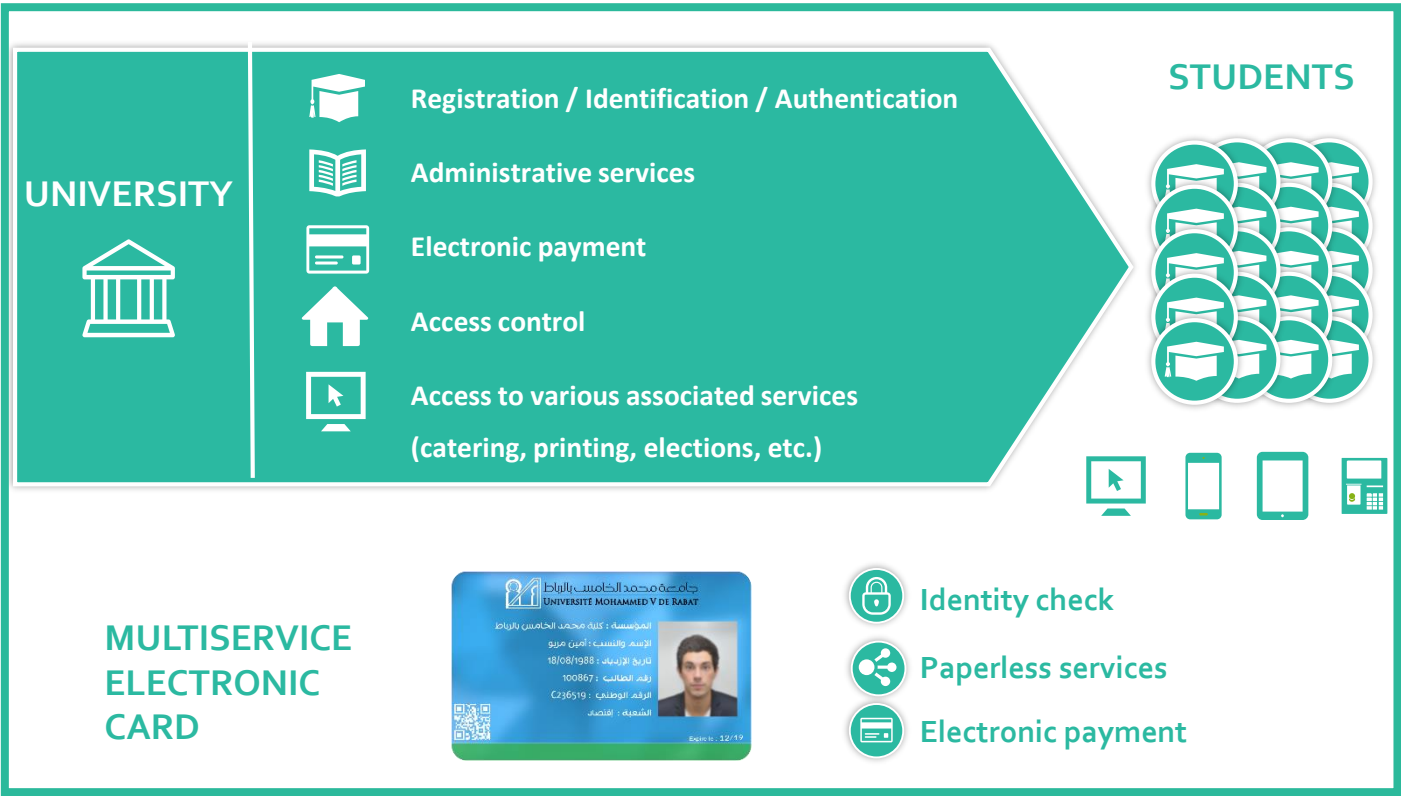

Mohammed V University has chosen M2M Group's MX Campus™ technology for its contactless multiservice university card program, a university services management platform designed to facilitate students' daily lives and support their mobility on and off campus.

Allowing access to dematerialized administrative services and intra-campus payment.

Benefits for the university

Aimed at the entire university community, this new multiservice card system uses cutting-edge technologies to control identity and access to the university's infrastructure, while offering students a range of fully dematerialized services, accessible via mobile terminals, self-service kiosks and web portals:

biometric identification – esignature at exams - attendance control - election management system - physical access control - consultation and request of administrative documents - access to the library and university restaurants, electronic payment...
